About

I am a software developer with a few years of experience building and supporting the product at a 20-person startup. My primary effective role has been lead front-end developer, in addition to writing large amounts of application-level back-end code and full-stack internal tooling, support, and infrastructure.

Work

Little Bird   2013-06-01 — 2015-12-04
Full-stack Developer + Front-end Lead

Little Bird Is a tool for discovering and analyzing communities on social networks. My role primarily involved transforming concepts and mockups into functional products.

Highlights

- Diff-based storage mechanism for large volumes of time-series data
- Graph-based content scoring algorithm
- Cross-departmental workflow automation
- Financial data explorer and report generators
- User activity monitoring and analytics systems
- Internal dashboards and data visualizations
- Fault-tolerant crawlers and scrapers
- Highly interactive front-ends for the first and second versions of the product in Ruby/JS and Clojure/ClojureScript, respectively

References

> Adam is one of the most versatile developers I've worked with. I've seen him jump from back end processes to front end DOM structure to CSS, each time with aplomb. He was a vital full-stack asset at Little Bird, where he not only helped build a product from scratch but many of the models that governed how it worked for internal teams and end users. I'd love the chance to work with Adam again!

> Adam is a product-focused developer who excels at working with both technical and non-technical teammates, customers, and partners. As a full-stack developer at an early-stage startup that has raised $3.5 million dollars to date, he was closely involved with the design and development of both the V1 and V2 product as well as internal tooling and support, deployment pipeline/automation, profiling, bug squashing, and business metrics. Beyond being a skilled developer, Adam is a genial and thoughtful co-worker with whom I hope to cross professional paths with in the future.
